Dear Simon,

Thank you for your letter regarding the important issue of protecting women and vulnerable people from harm, including harm facilitated through online dating and social discovery platforms.

We recognise the seriousness of this issue and the importance of effective partnership working across criminal justice, safeguarding and public protection agencies.

Nacro is committed to safeguarding and public protection in all areas of our work. Where we become aware of information indicating that an individual poses a serious risk to themselves or others, we work within relevant legal and professional frameworks to share information with appropriate authorities and partner agencies, including the police and probation services.

As an organisation supporting people to move forward positively from involvement with the justice system, we also remain mindful of the need to balance public protection responsibilities with individuals' rights, rehabilitation and reintegration.

We welcome continued dialogue across the sector about how organisations can contribute to reducing harm and improving safeguarding arrangements.

Thank you again for contacting us and for outlining the work being undertaken by the ODDA.

Yours sincerely,
